FUND MANAGER COMMENTARY

October was a rough month for equity markets in general and the fund in particular. Amazon had a disproportionate impact on performance, falling 20%. Amazon shares were hit after the company disappointed the market with weaker-than-expected revenue guidance for the fourth quarter. We take a different view on Amazon's prospects and believe that the narrative is changing from a revenue growth story to a profit growth story. There are three primary drivers of this change. First, high-margin segments like Amazon Web Services (Cloud) are growing faster than the low-margin core ecommerce business. Second, the third-party Marketplace business is growing faster than Amazon's first-party retail business. The difference is largely due to accounting: revenue is recognised on a net basis in the former and on a gross basis in the latter. This gives the impression that revenue growth is decelerating, which doesn't reflect underlying economic reality. Third, Amazon is just starting to realise material efficiency gains after years of investing in people and infrastructure. We believe Amazon shares have significant upside potential, and used October's weakness to add to our position.
